教學心得與獲獎感言： I am an optimistic person who is passionate about my work and life, and I hope to pass this positive outlook on to my students. I am a teacher because I want to make a positive impact in people's lives, and I know education is where I can

have the greatest influence. I decided to pursue a career in teaching because I feel that it not only allows me to enrich the lives of my students but my own as well. I firmly believe that we are all life-long learners.

For the past twenty-plus years, I have been teaching English as a foreign language to students from various departments at Ming Chuan University in Taiwan, and it has been a rewarding experience. I have developed my ability to teach classes with students who varied greatly in ability and had diverse needs. It has been a valuable challenge as I learned to adapt my teaching method to fit the needs of the learner.

My teaching is student-centered and interactive. My courses are designed to be activity-based, focusing on relevance to course objectives, student interests, and real-life application. I update my course design regularly to incorporate new technology and teaching methodology according to research to accommodate the ever-changing student population and society. I regularly meet with students to discuss their learning experience and modify my classes accordingly. Students have expressed their appreciation of my teaching methodology and their learning experience during exit interviews at the end of the semester. It's my honor to be recognized by the university by receiving the Teaching Excellence Award.

To conclude, my experiences have taught me a great deal of discipline and time management, which are essential in the teaching profession. Throughout the years, I have learned many strategies and methods that helped me grow as a teacher, and in return benefit my students. Teachers are also learners who need to be aware of the needs of the students and be resourceful in assisting them. I see myself not only as an English teacher, but also as a mentor and facilitator, helping students to achieve their goals.
